

I, for one, am tired of huge corporations and those relying on old technology trying to hinder the advancement of newer and better forms of entertainment. XM Radio is bringing just about every type of music and audio entertainment to the entire United States. People who previously were ignored by big radio, now can listen to everything any type of music they want.

Bringing local services to XM Radio Subscribers is a great way to augment that, now letting me get traffic at any point in the day. Now, while I can understand why the NAB would be upset about this, why should we hinder progress because the NAB cannot catch up?!?! The same argument is made about the phone companys now and Voice-over-IP services, Cable about sattelite, and the list goes on and on. Government should not regulate technology just because a traditional company cant keep with the times!!!

What kind of market are we running if we hinder progress?? I ask you, don't hinder XM Radio.. they have gone out on a limb to provide the best service they can, and have invested so much to do so. There will always be a place for local radio, but let XM Radio play as well.
